Summer Reading at the Nacogdoches Public Library

(Nacogdoches, TX) – The midway point for the summer has arrived, but there are still many programs for children, teens, adults and families at the Nacogdoches Public Library. The library staff also wants to encourage parents to enroll their kids in the summer reading program.

Studies have shown that children who continue to read daily during the summer months retain or improve their reading levels from the previous school year. Even babies and toddlers benefit from having a parent or caregiver read to them.

Through generous donations from Nacogdoches businesses, the public library offers prizes for participants who track their reading through the library's online program. Registration can be done by visiting the library's website at www.ci.nacogdoches.tx.us/library, in person, or calling the library staff at (936) 559-2970. Library staff can assist families who do not have Internet or computer access. For more information, please contact library staff.
